

What Urbana Owes Illinois People

The State of Illinois has located its great University in the city of Urbana. The people of the state who send their sons and daughters to Urbana to be educated have the right to expect that the city in turn shall maintain wholesome, moral conditions under which their youth must grow up. Of all cities in the state Urbana ought to lead in civic righteousness. It ought in every way be a model municipality, capable of protecting the thousands of students who come here annually from every part of the commonwealth. Its officials should be men of the highest character and the city should be kept free of all influences calculated to injure morally the young men and women entrusted to Urbana's care. Remember Urbana's obligation to the people of Illinois when you go to the polls next Tuesday and cast your vote for those who will stand together for the promotion of wholesome civic conditions in our University City.
