COL. JOHN S. WOLFE IS DEAD

He Expired at His Home in This City Thursday Evening

Was One of Champaign County's Most Prominent Attorneys and a Beloved Citizen.

Col. John S. Wolfe, one of Champaign county's best known and most beloved citizens and attorneys, died at the Wolfe residence on West Church street between Lynn and Elm streets, a few minutes after 8 o'clock yesterday evening.

Col. Wolfe's illness was of short duration and he passed out of the world without being subjected to great bodily pain. Paralysis was the cause of his taking off. He had been confined to his home since the first week of the present month, but it was not until a few days ago that he was forced to take to his bed.

When the paralysis first appeared it was scarcely noticeable, but it gradually spread through his body and at least a day before his death he had lain in an unconscious state, showing not the least signs of bodily pain. He passed away with the peacefulness and calm of a child dropping into slumberland.

It had been known by the attending physicians and more intimate friends of Col. Wolfe, since the first days of his illness that there was not much chance for his recovery and while his death came on the community as a shock at the same time it was not unexpected.

Col. Wolfe was born in Morgan county, Ill., Sept. 21, 1833, and was the son of George and Mary Simms Wolfe, both of whom were natives respectively of Greenbrier county, Va., and Spartanburg, S. C. He remained on his father's farm until 22 years of age, and pursued his early studies in the log school house in that vicinity, his desk being a slab of wood.

At an early age Col. Wolfe began to lay plans for his life and decided that eventually he would take up the profession of law. His first act after leaving home was to purchase five yoke of oxen and commence to break prairie, which laborious task he continued two years, the while keeping in view his cherished ambition. In 1857 he went to Carlville and entered the law office of John M. Palmer.

One day while going to cast his ballot at a general election he met another young man, who is now Col. J. W. Langley, the latter having arrived the day previous from his home in Pennsylvania for the purpose of teaching school. The acquaintance thus formed grew into a friendship and soon thereafter both were reading law in Mr. Palmer's office. The friendship ripened. They married sisters, and later formed a partnership in the law and both attained a marked degree of success.

In 1859 Col. Langley came to Champaign and in the year following came Col. Wolfe. The partnership was formed and together the young men began the battle of life. There were other battles however, to be fought, for in 1861 came the first call for troops in the war of the rebellion. Both young attorneys were fired with patriotism, but it was agreed that only one could be spared from the office. To settle it they drew straws and Col. Wolfe drew the one that sent him to the front. He joined Company A of the 20th Illinois volunteers for three-months' service and was made captain, but re-enlisted for three years before the time expired. The late Capt. Dan Bradley was first lieutenant and Major G. W. Kennard was second lieutenant. In about six months Capt. Wolfe disagreed with his colonel and resigned his command after the battle of Fredericksburg, returning to Champaign. In 1864 he raised the 135th Illinois volunteer infantry for 100-days service and acquired his military title as colonel of the regiment. While Col. Wolfe was doing all this, his law partner had got into a suit of blue and was firing a rifle with the muzzle southward.

Near the close of the war Col. Wolfe went to Chicago and Col. Langley again took up the practice of law. After three years absence Col. Wolfe again came to Champaign, and the former partnership was resumed.

It was about 1875 or 1876 that Col. Langley became judge of the county court, which office he retained twelve years, and with his election the partnership again became broken. Col. Wolfe's next partnership was with Manford Savage, which was dissolved after a few years, and Jan. 1, 1902, the law partnership of Wolfe & Mulliken was formed with A. D. Mulliken as the junior member. This last partnership was severed with the death of Col. Wolfe.

On May 15, 1862, Miss Celestie A. Young of Lorain county, O., became Col. Wolfe's bride. The union was one of the happiest known in this community. His good wife survives him, but he leaves no children. He is also survived by two brothers, James H. Wolfe of Girard and Thomas Wolfe of Kansas City, Mo. The former arrived here yesterday evening but it is not expected that the latter will be able to attend the funeral, as he is in very poor health.

Politically Col. Wolfe, in the latter part of his life, was a Democrat. Fraternally he was a Mason of high degree, a member of Champaign commandery No. 68, Knights Templars, of Col. No. 140, G. A. R., and the lodge of Elks. His father was a staunch Republican and a strong Prohibitionist. Although the colonel was an ardent supporter of Democratic principles he never allowed his partisanship to become offensive. He did not seek political honors, but acted as one of the "wheel horses" and advisers for the party in this vicinity.

The funeral will occur from the Wolfe residence at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon and burial will be at Mt. Hope cemetery. The funeral will be in charge of the lodge of Masons.

No Competition.

He Deserved It.

The policeman bought his prisoner before the magistrate.

"Your honor," said the officer, "I caught this man pounding a boy on the street."

"What have you to say for yourself?" the magistrate asked of the prisoner.

"Well, yer honor, I was jest goin' along the street, whistlin' an' mindin' me own business, when the young fellow flung a stone at me an' I ketch'd him an' cuffed him."

"What was you whistling?"

"'Bedelia.'"

"Ten dollars and costs," said the judge severely, "and if you come here again for the same offense you won't get off so easily."

The prisoner may be still in doubt as to what his offense really was, but you and I can guess.—Brooklyn Eagle.
